Escom Pays $10Mil For Commodore Assets

HEPPENHEIM, GERMANY, 1995 APR 25 (NB) -- Escom, which now claims to be Europe's largest wholesale PC vendor and distributor, has announced the acquisition of the remains of the Commodore empire.

Although officially not commenting on the actual purchase price, sources close to Escom are reporting that the company paid around $10 million for the rights to the Amiga range of computers, as well as a whole raft of patents relating to Commodore's PC technology.

According to Escom, the precise terms of the acquisition deal are currently being thrashed out with the liquidators of the Commodore empire in the US. The preliminary terms of the deal include Escom acquiring all of the rights to Commodore's range of personal computers, including the VIC, Max, and C-16/64 series, plus all the Amiga computers and their variants.

Escom officials say that they hope to continue selling most of the Amiga range of machines, as well as the elderly C-64 series, on a global basis. Sales of the C-64, Newsbytes notes, are continuing to be brisk in the East European market.

Although production of the C-64 range of home computers ceased last spring, Commodore was known to have stocks of the eight-bit computer, whose design dates back to the mid-1980s, which were being sold into Eastern Europe, where a boom market for C-64 peripherals has been created. Escom has said that it plans to look at resuming production of the C-64, "if at all feasible.

Escom, meanwhile, remains vague on its plans for the Amiga. Earlier this week, some sources were reported as saying that the company intends to develop and market an Amiga-based add-in board that could be used as a multimedia module for high-end PCs.

Press reports from German quote Escom officials as saying that production of the Amiga 600, as well as the 1200 and 4000 series, will also restart.

Production of these machines was frozen as soon as the company was placed into receivership last year.

Escom has also said it plans to promote the Amiga into markets the machine has not been seen in before. The German PC vendor is in active discussions with the Tianjin group of China, a multimedia specialist distributor, with a view to selling the machine into the booming Chinese computer market. Germany - Escom Rounds Out Commodore Acquisition HEPPENHEIM, GERMANY, 1995 MAY 12 (NB) -- Escom, the Germany computer manufacturer and retail company, has announced that its acquisition of Commodore is now complete. Escom has acquired to title to the Commodore ranges of machines, spanning the Vic/Max/C-64 family right through to the Amiga range of machines.

Escom officials have confirmed they have "dotted the i's and crossed the t's" on the contract for the transfer of the assets and intellectual property of Commodore Electronics, as well as several subsidiaries, which include worldwide rights to the Commodore and Amiga trademarks and patents.

The acquisition was originally approved on April 21 by the US Bankruptcy Courts in New York, and has been confirmed as being effective from May 1 this year.

Escom officials have also revealed a little more about their plans for the Amiga, which include reviving the ongoing development of the Amiga set-top box, an

A miga-based module that Commodore originally planned would form the heart of a multimedia black box that plugs into a user's TV, offering a range of multimedia services over the phone line.

Escom had said previously it wanted to revive manufacture of the C-64 home computer for sale into Eastern Europe. Now the company has confirmed these plans, and has also affirmed its intention to revive manufacture of the complete range of Amiga computers for sale on a global basis.

Escom has also entered into a joint venture with Tianjin Family-Issued Multimedia (TFM) of China, details of which call for TFM to begin the production and distribution of Amiga computers in mainland China.

TFM is billed as the leader in Mainland China in the production of games and education machines based on 16-bit technology and has developed one of the largest distribution organizations in Mainland China.

As reported previously by Newsbytes, although production of the C-64 range of home computers ceased last spring, Commodore was known to have stocks of the eight-bit computer, whose design dates back to the mid-1980s, which were being sold into Eastern Europe, where a boom market for C-64 peripherals has been created.

Old Broken VCRs and 40-Col Monitors: A Perfect Marriage

JEFF JONES. A cold, unrelenting demon has disrupted my household. That demon is the Cartoon Network. My daughters absolutely must watch an endless succession of Hanna Barbera cartoons whenever they aren't doing homework or playing outdoors in the hot Louisiana sun. The trouble is that in the evening my wife and I have our own shows to watch. So she allows the children (against my wishes) to watch television in our bedroom. This has slowly transformed my beloved bedroom into a wasteland of candy wrappers, dirty dishes, and tiny toys that hurt when you step on them.

It was time for my daughters to have their own television. Unfortunately, my checkbook didn't agree. But our household has two dead cheap VCR in it's closets. They no longer play tapes. They mangle them. They were still excellent television tuners. Since they were cheap VCRs it would cost less to buy a new one than to fix them. Fortunately I couldn't bring myself to toss them out.

My household is also a graveyard for old Commodore monitors. I have a 1084, Franklin and 1701 composite monitor at my disposal. These monitors may not be cable-ready televisions, but connected to the video and audio output of any VCR, they make great television monitors. As early as 1987 I was connecting VCRs to my 1084 for an exceptional picture when my 25-inch floor model TV (donated by my father-in-law) coughed up its final stable pictures.

It's no real trick to think of your VCR as a computer. Like your computer, the VCR is a black box that feeds the television a picture. Forget the coaxial cable out to TV" jack. What you need are two RCA plugs (regular pushtype stereo cables) and the video out and audio out jacks from your VCR. The video out goes to the monitor's video plug. The audio out goes to the monitor's audio plug. note that 1701 monitors must take VCR output in the front since it's expecting separated video in the back, which most home VCRs don't supply. You'll have to flick the "signal selector" switch in the back of the 1701 to "front". Some older 1084 monitors actually have a VCR button on them. I don't know what it's for because I just hooked up my VCR like a C-64 and switched between my Amiga and VCR with the Amiga being on the 80-column screen and the VCR on the 40-column screen.

You can hook your C-64 to the VCR at if you can't spare the monitor. If your monitor has front and rear plugs, you can have the C-64 in at the back, and the VCR in at the front. To switch between the two, you'll have to press the front/back switch. Or you can use a composite (two plug) monitor cable and plug the video and audio into the VCR's video and audio in. You'll have to change the VCR's input to video. Some VCRs make you tune to channel 0 for that. Just read your VCR's instructions for monitoring or recording from a video camera. In this case your C-64 is the camera -but only with composite video (the two prong monitor cable). If you use the game box, you'll have to use a coaxial cable adaptor and tune to channel 3 or 4.

LOADSTAR's BBS has had 1600 calls since it's been online. Most people seem to go straight to the BBS. There they hunt for BBS numbers closer to home. You can get to our BBS database by typing BC at any LOADSTAR: prompt.

must have Commodore graphics enabled to play. THe games also cost you credits to play. In other words, you must earn credits, either by uploading files or engaging in conversation on the subboards (National Message Bases), in order to build the credit to play the games. Option 3 allows you to exchange witty "one-liners" with other warped individuals all over the nation. Option 4 is a place where you can vote on topics, computer related and not. A running percentage of response is kept. Option 5 takes you to the message bases -- the debate boards. The debate boards are divided into two major special interest groups: SIG 1 and SIG 2. I think SIG 2 is the most diverse and interesting.

Yep, they are being made! Expected release of the first one is 1997. It will be a prequel to the star wars saga...

If you haven't got your Star Wars trilogy videos now, better buy them, CBS/Fox has put a moratorium on them (probably in anticipation of a re-release to theatres...)

Word is that along with the movie crews working on this series are the multi-media crews prepping the visuals and sounds for upcoming games to be released along with the films..

When I heard that Lucas wanted to use video technology instead of film, I was filled with trepidation. After all, who prefers video to film? I had images of raster lines on the big screen.

Now that I've seen films like Jurassic Park and The Mask, I'm filled with anticipation instead of portent.

Hard to believe that a movie like Tron was made a little more than 10 years and video technology as well as sound technology have come forward so much that when I hear that computers played heavily in

DISK TROUBLE?

Every copy of LOADSTAR leaves Softdisk as a verified okay disk set. 3.5-inch disks are virtually trouble-free because they are difficult to damage, even when mishandled. Unfortunately some 5.25-inch disks may become crushed in the mail and give READ ERRORS because they have trouble spinning. Fixing these crushed disks is quite easy. Just run the areas indicated along a hard edge such as a table. This should uncrimp the disk.
